The Harp of Heart-Strings.

SPINNING.
Just as the spinner turns the wheel
And with her song winds in her thread,
So as I turned the wheel of thought,
Its every round new pleasure brought,
Until "There is," I said,
"No joy that can compare with mine—
In all the world no heart so blest!"
And so the whole day long I spun,
And fast, so fast the thread wound on
Hope's shuttle in my breast.

But while I in the sunlight turned
The busy wheel and sang my song,
And while my shuttle was so full,
And all the thread so beautiful,
My spinning all went wrong.
The thread it broke and slipped my hold,
Till I could not discern
Where and which was the end I sought;
It tangled, and the wheel of thought
For me refused to turn.

In the old-time exultant way,
My hand its cunning all had lost;
It could no longer deftly spin,
Because the thread of hope had in
The thread of sorrow crost.

HELEN A. MANVILLE, La Crosse, Wis.

LITERARY NOTES.

—There are men "whom not to know argues one's self unknown." But to find the "unknown" ones who do not know them, we have only to go to the places where the great men were born. A gentleman visiting Stratford-on-Avon saw a rustic sitting on a fence.

"That's Shakespeare's house, isn't it?" he asked, pointing to the building.

"Yes."
"Ever been there?"
"No."
"How long has he been dead?"
"Don't know."
"Many people come here?"
"Yes."

"Been to the house?"
"No, never been to the house."
"What did he do?"
"Don't know."
"Brought up here?"
"Yes."

"Did he write?"
"O, yes, he wrote!"
"What was it? You must know."
"Well," said the rustic, "I think he wrote for the Bible."

—The great literary names of the country stand for domestic purity and the home virtues. Irving did not marry; but after Miss Hoffman's death he lived like a true knight, carrying his heart for an invisible bride. Longfellow's home was sweet and beautiful as any poem he ever wrote. Nothing could exceed the genial pleasantness of the home life of Bryant; of the Danas, father and son; of Hawthorne, whose gifted wife gave him so much cheer and aid in his work; of Bayard Taylor, and of Dr. Holland. Emerson's home at Concord was an idyl, and hard-hearted people who visited him did not wonder that he talked so softly and sweetly and believed that all human beings have an angel side. How could he help being everything noble or believing everything good which he lived in paradise?

—Walt Whitman is above the average height, his hair and beard are long and white as snow, and when he sits with his back to the light from the window, there is perceptible in his ruddy face a deep, rich, almost maroon color. The face must have been very handsome once, and now, as he talks, the lines of age fade away, the face takes on the look of youth again and the beauty of a portrait that hangs on the wall. His eyes are blue-gray, and his forehead prominent just above the eyes, but not high. Although he will not clothe his ideas in the old forms of poetry, he has not declined to dress his body in the style of garments which poets affect, and his expanse of shirt bosom, fastened with a white button the size and shape of a buttonwood-ball, and his vast rolling collar, are of spotless purity.

—Charles Dickens inherited from his mother a keen appreciation of the droll and of the pathetic, as also considerable dramatic talent. She is described as a little woman, who had been very nice-looking in her youth, having bright hazel eyes, and being a thoroughly good-natured, companionable body. She possessed an extraordinary sense of the ludicrous, and her power of imitation was something astonishing. On entering a room she almost unconsciously took an inventory of its contents, and if anything happened to strike her as out of place or ridiculous, she would afterward describe it in the quaintest possible manner. In like manner she noted the personal peculiarities of her friends and acquaintances.

—Macaulay had extreme sensibilities. Many things that appealed to his pity easily moved him to tears, whether in the nature of things before him, at the theatre, or on the printed page. He loved his sisters throughout his life with an intense and worshipful love, such as those noble and refined minds are capable of feeling. The marriage of one of them excited feelings akin to jealousy, and when death robbed him of her, it nearly broke his heart. For a person who made so many desirable acquaintances, he formed but few true friendships. He was suspicious and slightly selfish.

—"I have finished my book ('Middlemarch')," wrote George Eliot to Alexander Main, "and am thoroughly at peace about it—not because I am convinced of its perfection, but because I have lived to give out what it was in me to give, and have not been hindered by illness or death from making my work a whole, such as it is. When a subject has begun to grow in me I suffer terribly until it has wrought itself out—become a complete organism; and then it seems to take wing and go away from me. That thing is not to be done again—that life has been lived. I could not rest with a number of unfinished works on my mind. When they—or, rather, when a conception has begun to shape itself in written words, I find that it must go on to the end before I can be happy about it. Then I move away, and look at it from a distance without any agitations."

—On one occasion Joel Barlow, the youngest of the triad of American poets during the struggle for independence, met Oliver Arnold, a cousin of Benedict Arnold, the traitor, in a book-store in New Haven, and asked him for a specimen of his talent for making extempore rhymes. Oliver at once said, in allusion to Barlow's poetic version of Watt's Psalms:

"You've proved yourself a sinful creature;
You've murdered Watts and spoiled the meter;
You've tried the word of God to alter,
And for your pains deserve a halter."

—Mr. Gladstone, it is said, rarely writes anything with his own hand, his gift of spontaneous composition, like Mr. Doyle's, amounting to improvisation. His treatise upon the Greek drama was dictated from a few notes to a staff of shorthand writers, who paid the right honorable gentleman a visit every morning for a couple of hours, and took turns as they do in the "gallery," passing their manuscript to the printer at the end of the day.

L. S. PLAUT & CO.

NEWARK, N. J.
Announcement Extraordinary

The attention of the public of New Jersey is respectfully called to the great
BEE HIVE ALTERATION SALE

which was inaugurated on Tuesday morning, July 13th, with the greatest slaughter of prices ever heard of in this State.

$250,000.00

over a quarter of a million dollars' worth of Fancy Goods, Fancy Dry Goods, Men's Furnishings, Ladies', Children's, Boys' & Youths' Shoes, etc., offered during this great sale

At a Great Sacrifice.

The Bee Hive is to be remodelled and greatly enlarged, as these improvements are absolutely necessary for its enormously increased business. Its present large capacity having been completely out-grown, and now for the third time in its existence it is to be more than doubled in size.

It is plain to all that to make these great changes we must reduce our immense stock of goods to the smallest possible proportions. This can only be done in one way, and to accomplish this reduction, prices have been placed averaging fully 25 per cent. reduction and in many cases to one-half former value. When you consider for a moment that these reductions are made upon new merchandise of this seasons purchase, and not upon old stock, you can then realize that grand bargains are likely to be found during this great alteration sale.

Remember per this is our extremity and your opportunity, and no such bona fide sacrifice has ever been made in Newark before, and not likely to be done again in many years. People from a distance will save more than enough to compensate them for expenses and traveling by visiting this great sale. The most careful attention will be paid to filling orders by mail, and customers can rest assured they will get just what they order and just what is advertised.

This Great Sale is now in Progress.
